Notations and Commentary About the Fate/kaleid liner Card Series.:

1. No Trial Deck exists for this card series, not even in Japan!
2. Spanning from 2013 to the present year of this writing, 2021, there have been five WeiB Schwarz card series releases for this specific Fate franchise in Japan.
3. This English release is a significantly modified version of the third Japanese card series release, designation PI/S40, circa May 20th, 2016. Which itself still remains the only standard Booster Pack release for the franchise.
4. All four of the other card releases for this series in Japan have been in Extra Booster Pack form, so far.
5. Most of the card artwork was changed or swapped out for this English Edition release.
6. None of the seven Promo Cards associated with this release in Japan were released in the English Edition.
7. Each Japanese Booster Pack Case contained one of three random Promo Cards, English Edition cases got none!
8. Promo Card PE01 was originally a Promo Card from the first Japanese card series release (PI/SE18-P01).
9. Promo Card PE02 was originally a Promo Card from the second Japanese card series release (PI/SE24-P02).
10. In addition to the seven Promo Cards, and additional fifteen cards were cut from the English Edition. In total, twenty-two cards were removed from this English Edition.

In summary, the Fate/kaleid liner franchise cards have been treated as a premium product line by not making a Trial Deck available.

As a fan of the overall Fate franchise myself, I'm rather disappointed that Bushiroad International neglected, or just never bothered to notice, that Fate's primary market demographic is, and has always been, adults. Fate/kaleid liner is no exception, despite the cutesy appearances of the characters, this anime series' target demographic audience is adults. Bushiroad themselves have been very keen to voluntarily provide a suggested age rating on their own game release products over the years with many card game series products noting a suggested age of 13+ or 17+ on the packaging due to some of the depicted imagery on the cards. This apparent decision made to entirely remove some cards, and change out the artwork on many others, to achieve a "13+" suggest age for a card game based on a TV anime series made for adults, already long available in English by year 2016, carrying a U.S.A. TV program rating of "TV MA" (ages 17+), just makes this needless voluntary censorship feel all the more ridiculous.

The case of who the target demographic for Fate/kaleid liner cards may be is clearly exhibited when examining the "cost of entry" to build a deck from these cards. The first (2013) and second (2015) Japanese card releases of this franchise were in 'Extra Booster Pack' form, priced at 476yen (+ tax) per pack, containing just six cards each. To buy enough cards to build a deck with would require someone to purchase at least nine packs at a staggering 4,284yen (+ tax), roughly $44 US Dollars with tax. Even if someone went through with that, the buyer would then have 54 random cards from those nine packs, no rule book, and no playmat. During this same time period the MSRP of a WeiB Schwarz Trial Deck (pre-configured fifty card deck, rule book, and a playmat) was a very reasonable 1,238yen (+tax), roughly US $14 with tax. Seems safe to say that Bushiroad's main office in Japan understands who the target market for Fate related products are, and the international branch doesn't.
